Jack McShane is only 13, but he stands as one of the rebuilders of New Orleans.

He decided to help his city - still badly damaged from Hurricane Katrina two years ago - by caring for a large park two blocks from home.

5 Jack, his mother and younger brother fled the city a few days before the hurricane hit. They went to Indianapolis, where both sets of grandparents live.

“I was glued to the TV, looking at what the storm did,” he recalls. “The lowest point was when I saw what happened to the lakefront. I watched the yacht club burn down, and I love the lake, I love sailing. I just knew it would be so different for a long time, that it would never be the same.”

10 Jack went to school in Indianapolis for the fall semester, instant-messaging friends a lot. “Otherwise it was kind of like a vacation, except I missed my dad so much, because I’m really close to him.”

His father, Patrick McShane, stayed behind to continue his law practice and start repair of their two-story home. The first floor was ruined. “My mom was on her computer trying to figure out how to get our insurance money,” Jack says.

By Christmas, Jack was home and saw what had happened to City Park.

“Jack loves City Park and always has,” his mother says. “He’d come home from biking and say, ‘The grass is just growing and growing, nobody’s taking care of it.’”

20 By summer, Jack and his brother, Frank, wanted to volunteer to help New Orleans. But agencies wouldn’t take them because they were too young. One fall morning in 2006, Jack saw his neighbor loading a lawn mower into her trunk<sup>1</sup>. She told him she was part of a small team that had started to mow grass and clean up at City Park every Saturday morning. Jack asked whether he could work, too. He has been there ever since.

25 “Unless we’re out of town, he goes every Saturday like clockwork,” his mother says. “His devotion has surprised us.”

His neighbor calls Jack “very intelligent and passionate about what he’s doing at the park. It’s amazing that someone his age has taken such an interest in this. He’s the only child on the seven-person crew.”

30 Although Jack is modest about the work, his mom says he’ll see its value in the future. “In years to come, I think he will feel really proud of himself and say it was one of the things that kept him going.”

Says his dad: “Jack has learned resilience. He has taught me more about volunteerism than I ever taught him.”
