Female WWII Pilots: The Original Fly Girls

Margaret Phelan Taylor grew up on a farm in Iowa. She was 19, had just completed two years of college and was ready for adventure in 1943 when a Life magazine cover story on the female pilots caught her eye. Her brother was training to be a pilot with the Army. Why not her? She asked her father to lend her money for a pilot's license — $500, a huge amount then.

"I told him I had to do it," Taylor says. "And so he let me have the money. I don't think I ever did pay it back to him either."

But there was a problem. She was half an inch shorter than the 5-foot-2-inch<sup>1</sup> requirement.

"I just stood on my tiptoes," she says. When she arrived at Avenger Field in Sweetwater, Texas, where most of the WASPs<sup>2</sup> were trained, "Well, there were a lot of other short ones just like me, and we laughed about how we got in."

Short, tall, slim, wide, they all came in knowing how to fly. The military trained male pilots from scratch, but not the female civilian volunteers.

15 "They didn't want to bring in a bunch of girls who didn't know how to fly an airplane," says Katherine Sharp Landdeck, associate professor of history at Texas Woman's University, who's writing a book about the WASPs, tentatively called Against Prevailing Winds: The Women Airforce Service Pilots and American Society. "So you have women who are getting out of high school and taking every dime they had to learn how to fly so they could be a WASP."

20 Once when Taylor was ferrying an aircraft cross-country, somewhere between Arizona and California, she saw smoke in the cockpit. Taylor was trained to bail out if anything went wrong. "But the parachutes were way too big. They weren't fitted to us," she says. Her plane was smoking and Taylor faced a defining moment.

25 "I thought, 'You know what? I'm not going until I see flame. When I see actual fire, then I'll jump.'"

Was she scared? "No. I was never scared. My husband used to say, 'It's pretty hard to scare you.'"

Document 2

'Well, would ya like to go to Dublin?'

'Why would I want to do that, Tommy?'

'I know a nice woman in the city who's lookin' for a good girl to work in her house.'

'Oh, really? And what would I be expected to do?'

5 'You know, cookin', cleanin', that kind of thing.'

Well, I was a girl and I suppose I was a good girl. I knew how to cook and clean and 'that kind of thing' – and I needed a job.

I had mixed feelings about going to the big city. I was delighted but also apprehensive.

10 The morning I left, I crossed the kitchen to the hall to say my goodbyes. Mammy was the only one in the house to wish me well. I picked up the new cardboard suitcase I'd bought in the town that weekend, ready to leave.

Mammy was crying. 'Won't you take care?' was all she said. I wanted to put my arms around her but I wasn't comfortable about showing my feelings; my body shrank with tension when we hugged. I was determined to walk out the door with my head held high, and I didn't 15 want to cry.

As I reached the gate, I turned to see Mammy standing in the doorway. Her tears upset me but I had to leave and catch my bus. When I reached the top of Wakley's Hill I stopped and turned round to see if she was still waving me off. She wasn't. I knew there was nothing left for me in Clonmore but, secretly, I hoped she would beg me not to go and give me an 20 excuse to stay at home with her.

Ireland had little to offer the working classes in the 1940s, particularly in rural towns. And Clonmore was in the middle of Ireland's bog land. There was nothing there for a young woman like me. I resented leaving my home to work in somebody else's.
